Art News

It is hard to believe the school year is more than half over and that second semester is on its way. That being said, I am excited to see new faces that are eager to show off their creativity and talent. This week in seventh grade, students are making clay food that will be kiln fired and ready for paint in the near future. The eighth grade students have also started working with clay but in a more independent way. Each student was to create a clay vessel of their choosing. Some students are working on functional objects like bowls and vases, while others are creating decorative sculptures.
